Regina Dinkes draws upon her wide-ranging legal experience, including as in-house counsel at a major financial institution and as a Corporate attorney at a large international law firm, to help clients negotiate and draft commercial contracts that mitigate risk and optimize business outcomes.

Regina focuses her practice on commercial transactions, advising clients on the deals that keep their businesses running and facilitate growth. Her experience includes negotiating, analyzing, and drafting agreements for a wide variety of commercial transactions, including but not limited to purchase, lease, and sale agreements for capital equipment, professional services, software licenses and related documentation, and maintenance. She also reviews and structures confidentiality agreements, termination letters, RFPs, and other important business documents. Clients value the thorough analysis and preparation Regina brings to this work, delivering clear advice and a seasoned perspective.

Regina has significant experience in the technology and financial services sectors. Her work as part of the Institutional Investor Services business unit of a major investment bank included the drafting and review of corporate, custodian/trustee, and investment documentation, including but not limited to subscription agreements, limited partnership agreements, side letters, non-disclosure agreements, amendments, and resolutions.

Clients also turn to Regina for legal advice on entity formation inter-company agreements and related general corporate activities. She has also worked extensively with Latin America and the Caribbean throughout her career, structuring contracts to meet local regulatory requirements in the region and analyzing and monitoring regulatory compliance around existing agreements.
