Kim Paschall is a former federal prosecutor in the U.S. Attorney's Office in Washington, D.C., where she spent almost nine years leading complex and high-stakes criminal investigations. Most recently, she was a prosecutor in the National Security Section of the Criminal Division, where she prosecuted export control and sanctions violations, espionage matters, terrorism cases, and other crimes affecting our nation's security. Kim's focus of her practice is to provide first-rate white collar, investigations, and compliance services, as well as highlight a specialty in export controls and sanctions. She leverages her experience as a former federal prosecutor to serve clients seeking a skilled trial lawyer, a diligent investigator, and a knowledgeable advisor, particularly on matters interfacing federal and state governments. Kim applies the Super Hero Rules to her practice: Be Courageous. Protect the Innocent. Make a Difference. And Use Your Super Powers Wisely. Kim is dedicated to figuring out what a win looks like for her clients, and delivering on those business objectives, with efficiency and style.

A former musical theatre major and one-time newspaper reporter, Kim is passionate about telling her client's story effectively, and she has done so over and over in her legal career, standing before federal and state courts in more than 50 trials and 75 indicted cases. Kim has also trained hundreds of young lawyers on Theatre Tips for Trial Attorneys, drawing lessons from Shakespeare to Sondheim to effectively advocate before any audience.
